

The WZ Method and Introductory Statement– Public Sector

Directions: Construct the listed components of the WZ Method, including your Introductory Statement and rationalizations for your investigation. The outline to your approach should be based on the subject profile and facts of the case. Use the spaces below to record your outline.

Who we are and what we do	As you know, my name is _____ and I work with the _____ department. Our job is to protect the community, its _____, _____, and _____ from any type of criminal activity. To do that, we get involved with a number of different complaints. For example, some might be traffic problems that we have to deal with on a daily basis. Other times we have to deal with business or homeowners who are filing false reports in an attempt to obtain a fraudulent insurance settlement. Then we have those instances where someone is genuinely a victim. The department’s primary concern obviously has to be with the most serious type of incidences: homicides, rapes, rather than something of a minor nature, like a small item being take or someone driving over someone’s grass.
Types of Crimes	As an investigator, we’re asked to look into any number of different types of crimes. I am sure you are aware that our community, like any other community, has its share of problems. Those problems range from... Crimes: <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/>
How an investigation is conducted	Now, when we discover or we receive a problem or a complaint from a citizen, the case is assigned for investigation. Now, when it's assigned for investigation, we’ll use any number of different techniques to attempt to establish who was responsible for the incident under investigation. Investigate Techniques <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> These, as well as many other different type of investigative techniques, help us to identify the individual responsible and begin to develop the case. It may help supply us with the information necessary to obtain a search warrant so that we can search a home, vehicle, or garage wherever we believe we may recover additional evidence of the individual's guilt.
